Dear Steve,

After talking to Stan Lee and Scott Einbinder I have discovered that neither of them were aware that you had turned in the first draft of Ironman to Universal.

Stan was particularly upset about this as it implies that he has given his blessings to the script which he has not. The same is also true for myself. As director for this project, Universal is paying me to supervise the writing of this script. By unilaterally deciding to turn in this script, you have compromised both Stan and myself professionally.

I understand that Michael Miner was pressuring you to be paid, but your response to him should have been that you had to wait for the approval of the rest of your team before you could do so. Michael is well aware that we have functioned in this manner in the past and although he may have grumbled a bit he would have understood and accepted this fact. I am afraid that your actions may have jeopardized the project both with Universal and Marvel.

If so, I hope the damage can be repaired and that in the future we will operate as we have in the past -- as a team who share the same goal -- a successful screen adaptation of Ironman.

I will be leaving for Italy next Sunday and hope that we can meet this week to discuss this. If not, my numbers in Italy are:

RE: "IRON MAN"

Dear Stuart:

Thank you for taking time out to meet and share your thoughts concerning "Iron Man" with us. Your views and apparent plans were stimulating as well as encouraging.

As further food-for-thought, we've enclosed cassette copies of a few episodes of the "Iron Man" syndicated TV series of 1966, and feel that it effectively captures the grittier dramatic tone of the original comic-book character and stories we discussed.

We look forward to your reaction and the chance to meet with you again soon.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey B. Yalowitz

RE: "IRON MAN"

Dear Stuart:

Congratulations on the recent success of "Honey I Blew Up the Kid," and thank you for your continued interest in the role we might play in moving "Iron Man" forward.

As agreed, the following will serve as our first level proposal in reference to the project. We would like to serve as Associate Producers on "Iron Man," and propose to,

1. secure studio or major independent company commitment to develop "Iron Man" for theatrical release,
2. coordinate and procure licensing and merchandising commitments with corporate advertisers,
3. seek out foreign distribution and equity investment

For the above services, we would expect and be interested in discussing with you a combined flat fee and mutually agreeable percentage of the film's net receipts.

We look forward to discussing a more specific relationship between ourselves and your company sometime in the near future as we firmly believe we can be a fundamental asset in the launching of "Iron Man," and enthusiastically support the project's success.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Joe,

Here's the IRON MAN treatment written by Roy Thomas after working out a story line with Stan and myself. I think it's rather timely in the wake of the World Trade Center bombing.

As I mentioned, Greg Coote at Village Road Show is interested in optioning IRON MAN. Would it make sense for us to meet with Savoy? Please give me a call after you have looked this over.

Yours truly,

Stuart Gordon

RE: ROY THOMAS

Dear Joe:

Greetings. Hope you had a nice Fourth of July weekend.

I think we are setting a record for most exchanged phone calls.

I am calling you at Stuart Gordon's request, regarding my client
(and your colleague) Roy Thomas, and your IRONMAN proposal.

Stuart mentioned that you may have someone else deal with me on this.

In any event, I would like to set up a time for a call convenient to you, and/or your designate.

What time works for you?

Best regards,

Daniel Ostroff
